A POOR JOKE.

The young men who were responsible for stealing a cadaver from the pickling vat at the university and placing it in the chemistry lecture room certainly should be disciplined. Their prank was doubtless intended as a joke, but it was a mighty poor sort of humor. It was about as funny as playing ghost for the purpose of scaring a timid child out of its wits. Young men who are old enough to be students at the university are old enough to know better.

The public understands that boys will be boys, that, in their youthful exuberance they will do things that seem to them funny, but that are really not funny at all. And the chances are that when they have time to think, after even trivial pranks, they are sorry enough to make other punishment unnecessary. But the cadaver business transgresses all reasonable bounds. Even a corpse, though it be of the humblest, is entitled to some rights.

When the legislature enacted a statute giving to the university medical department unclaimed bodies in certain cases, the understanding was that the bodies were to be used exclusively in scientific work. There was no thought that they would be used as footballs for the amusement of heartless young men. If the university authorities want to bring about the repeal of the law under which material for the dissecting classes is secured, it can hardly adopt a better method than the toleration of the recent abuse.

CLOSE TO THE PRESIDENT.

The criticisms of the navy, which form the basis for the investigation now being conducted by the senate's committee on naval affairs, have been traced very close to the president of the United States. Naval officers who are nearest to the president, his aides and others, have been practically unanimous in affirming that the armor belts are not set a sufficient distance above the water line, that the ammunition hoists are defective, that the freeboards are too low, and that the other charges of inefficient construction made by a magazine writer in a recent article are well founded.

On the stand Wednesday, Commander Key, a former aide to the president, went certainly as far as the magazine writer went in everything he testified to, and in some instances he went further. It is now hardly conceivable that Mr. Roosevelt did not know in advance that the magazine article was to be published. Certainly his personal friends in the navy, who have been testifying before the senate committee, must have given the writer of the first big story a good deal of his information. And just as certainly they did not give out the information without first consulting the president.

There seems to be a disposition in some quarters to make political capital out of the matter. This should not be done by any one. The entire nation is interested in the navy. If it has defects that are remediable, defects that would prove to be a serious handicap in the event of war, the public is entitled to the information, to the end that a sentiment in favor of bringing the navy up to date be created.

Our sea fighters are the best fighters on earth. They have proved that many times in the glorious naval history of the republic, from the time John Paul Jones whipped the Serapis, down through the victory of Perry on Lake Erie, Farragut in the war between the states, the Monitor and the Merrimac, Dewey at Manila bay and Schley and Sampson off Santiago. There has never been a time when our navy has not more than measured up to every test, and often when the forces of the enemy seemed immensely superior.

Modern training has made our seamen the best marksmen in the world. The records of the navies of the great powers prove this to be true. In practice our men score more hits and fire the big guns more rapidly than the men of any navy that floats. With conditions anywhere near equal we believe the American navy could defeat the most powerful fleet sent against it, even in its present condition.

But if improvements can be made, they should be made, for the American seaman is entitled to the best weapons modern science can give him.

AWKWARD TARIFF QUESTION.

Herr Herman Ridder, publisher of the New York Staats Zeitung and president of the Newspaper Publishers' association, has caught the Paper trust and Director of the Census North in about as cold a bunco game as could be imagined—even in Washington. Moreover, Herr Ridder has made a few remarks about it that have sent chills down the trust's spinal column and brought out a feeble explanation from North.

It happened this way: The Paper trust, being in need of money for the payment of dividends on watered stock, concluded to make the newspaper publishers pay it. Accordingly, the trust raised the price of print paper to the tune of about $60,000,000 a year and calmly told the publishers to produce the cash. Being in no position to refuse, the aforesaid publishers have been producing all right, but they have made a noise that would silence any grand halting sign of distress ever heard before.

Unkind as it may seem to lovers of the tariff for trusts, the publishers' association appealed to congress to take the tariff off of paper and wood and pulp, amounting to $6 per ton; and showed that even with this tariff against them, the Canadian mills are able to compete with the American mills and still make money. Further, in a letter to the attorney general, the publishers offer to prove the existence of a combination among the American mills the purpose of which is to prevent competition, limit production, raise prices and otherwise violate all the laws, statutory and moral, which relate to trade.

In this emergency, Representative Dalzell of Pennsylvania rushed to the defense of the tariff and the paper trust. Being a Republican, that was natural for Dalzell. He asked North to furnish figures as to the price of paper for a period of years. North furnished them—but they were bogus. His prices didn't come within $6 a ton of showing the low price in effect before the trust got into action; and they failed altogether to show the prices for three years, from 1897 to 1900, when paper dropped to $18 a ton less than the present price fixed by the trust.

Mr. Ridder exposes this deception in a letter to the president, and North explains that he got his figures from another man, who took them from a trade paper published in the interest of the trust.

The beauty of this situation is that it affords a perfect example of the way a trust robs its patrons by grace of the tariff. Ostensibly the tariff on paper was designed to protect American labor and an infant industry; in reality it has been of no benefit to American labor, as the trust's own battles with labor show; and it has only served to entrench a criminal monopoly in power so firmly that it defies court orders, organizes in defiance of law, laughs at the suggestion that it can be reached by legislation and calmly goes on lifting the price of paper and the scalps of the newspaper publishers.

This isn't a partisan question, since the Republican papers are hit so hard they make quite as much fuss about being robbed as do their Democratic associates. It is just a plain question whether one of the greatest industries in the country shall be held up, the people compelled to pay more for newspapers and literature, or whether licensed thieves are to pursue un molested their gladsome occupation of fostering an "infant industry" and saving American labor—the small consideration of $60,000,000 every twelve months.

The question is an awkward one for congress to have raised just at the opening of a presidential campaign, but it can't be dodged much longer. Not while Herr Ridder retains his vigor with the pen and has his ordinary turnverein fighting clothes on.

In the announcement that Nat C. Goodwin is to retire from the stage in order to devote his entire time to his rich mining interests in Rawhide, some people may be pardoned if they imagine they see the work of a clever press agent.

SOCIETY

Mrs. Charles Cain Crismon entertained at a delightful bridge tea yesterday afternoon for Mrs. W. A. McDaniels, who leaves today for Parkersburg, W. Va., and for Mrs. Edwin Butcher, formerly a schoolmate of Mrs. Crismon. Ten tables of bridge were played, and prizes were won by the two honored guests and Mrs. William H. Child. Besides these a basket of violets, one of which decorated each table, fell to the lucky one at the table. The national colors were used in decoration in compliment to the two army ladies, and the house was gay with flags and bunting throughout all the rooms. Even the flowers and leaves carried out the tri-color idea. The hostess was assisted by her mother, Mrs. Isadore Mayer, Mrs. Pauline Sands and Mrs. Jack Rich.

At the regular meeting of the Ladies' Literary club this afternoon, Miss Clara I. Colburne will read a paper on "The Education of Girls." Miss Mildred Tibbals will give a talk on "Oxford Town and University." The music will be furnished by Mrs. Helen Shearman Gue, who will sing "Far Across the Desert Sand," by Amy Mulford Sendon and "Love," by Roger Miss Alice Seckels will play Chopin's "F Sharp Sonata" and one of McDowell's sea pieces, and the club chorus will sing.

An event out of the ordinary will take place at the First Presbyterian church this evening, in the form of a dinner tendered to the women of the congregation by the men. A program of toasts will be given. Mrs. R. C. Cordell presiding. Among those responding will be Mrs. J. C. Royle, Miss Paden, Miss Paul, Mrs. E. E. Shepard and Miss Zorbaugh. Mr. Skelton will render a violin solo and Mr. Copley will sing.

Mrs. Kenneth C. Kerr reached here from Riverside Wednesday evening, having been summoned on account of the illness of her mother, J. H. Young, accompanied by his sister, Miss Afton Young, reached here over the Southern Pacific from Oakland twelve hours later, so all of Mrs. Young's children are at her bedside.

A simple and pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Keenan, 1183 West Second South street, last evening, when their daughter, Miss Christina, was given in marriage to Riley M. Harmon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. C. McIntyre of the Westminster Presbyterian church.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Clark, Jr., reached town yesterday morning from Los Angeles and left for Battle, spending only a few hours with Salt Lake friends. They were in their private car and came up to town only to spend the morning with Mrs. A. W. McCune, Jr.

Mrs. E. F. Hanna and Mrs. James Dinwoodey entertained nearly fifty of their friends last evening at cards at the Dinwoodey home, when "500" was the game played. The house was decorated with green and white, shamrocks and white carnations being used. Twelve tables of the game were played and the hostesses were assisted by the Misses Hanna and Dinwoodey and Mrs. J. G. and Mrs. R. J. Dinwoodey.

Miss Marian Oberndorfer and Miss Elsie McMillan will entertain at a dance this evening at the J. E. Bamberger home, on East First South street.

Mrs. E. E. Hanna and Mrs. James Dinwoodey will entertain at cards again this afternoon at the Dinwoodey home.

Mrs. John Stuart Manley has gone to Indianapolis to visit relatives for a time.

Miss Ione Morrison will entertain at a bridge tea this afternoon.

Miss Minette Baer and Miss Eloise Sadler went out to Garfield on Wednesday to spend the day with Miss Howard at the Howard home there.

Mrs. Charles Hollingsworth and Miss Minnie Kiesel of Ogden spent a few days in town the early part of the week.

The Cup and Saucer club will meet today with Mrs. D. Donohoe at her home on Brigham street.

Mrs. M. E. Charlton will be home today or tomorrow from New York City.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Leonard left yesterday for Denver, where they will make their home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Knight of Garfield will leave shortly for the east to remain indefinitely.

Mrs. M. A. Brandwin, formerly of New York, is at home at the Kenyon.

The bridge tea which Mrs. Leslie L. Savage had planned for today, in compliment to Miss Jasmine Young, has been indefinitely postponed.

Mrs. A. C. Smith entertained the members of the Plate club yesterday at her home.

W. P. Cooper entertained about twenty-five of his friends again last evening at a stag party at his home. Cards and music filled the evening and a buffet supper was enjoyed.

The girls of the Gamma Phi sorority of the university will entertain at a dancing party Saturday evening in the assembly hall in the Museum building. The dance is to be a costume affair and will be the first event of the kind given at the university for a number of years. The guests will be the fraternities, the sororities and a few friends of the Gamma Phi girls.

Miss Ida McIntosh is at home at the Halls hotel.

Extraordinary Sale of White Goods, Linens and Domestic

Rearrangement and Enlargement of Department Occasions a Selling Event of Particular Moment in that the Prices are Lowered Considerably Under Usual Sale Prices

MERCHANDISE IS STANDARD—NOT AN INFERIOR ARTICLE OFFERED

Quality is first consideration; price the second. Every expectation in quality will be met; the prices indicate real bargains. The department has long been crowded for room. It now enjoys adequate facilities for a large business. The rearrangement and enlargement necessitates the quick selling of considerable stock. At this time cost is not considered. The stock is choice, embracing the newest patterns in sheer and dainty summer weaves; handsome snow white linens, and standard domestic lines.

Usually a sale of like importance is reserved for announcement in the Saturday evening and Sunday papers, but the rush of work incident to the occupancy of the entire building, and the approach of our formal opening, forces the management to take decisive steps. Sale starts today

Table Linens

Bleached and silver bleached; to facilitate shopping we have decided to cut up into desirable lengths our entire stock of table linens; all lengths from 1 1/2 up to 3 1/2 yards at the following prices—50c to $3.66 each.
